WHEELING, MARCH 6, 1891.

Czar Reed has lost his throne, but you may notice that his shining crown of glory is still there.

VICE PRESIDENT Morton's farewell was graceful and to the point. Mr. Morton has abundantly justified the wisdom of his selection.

ACCORDING to the seal adopted by the State of Wyoming her lovely women are clothed with the ballot in place of the conventional garb of our civilization. And Wyoming has blazards at that.

WHAT has Ohio county done to the State of West Virginia that she should be used despoil by the Legislature? Ohio county never loses an opportunity to advance the welfare of West Virginia.

HISTORICAL yet unborn will watch with interest to see whether the untamed Democracy will upset all the rulings of the Speaker which they have denounced as pestiferous and quite Russian.

NEARLY 20,000 bills were introduced in the Fifty-first Congress. One in ten became a law. More than half of the bills in every Congress are introduced without any chance of passing them. They cost time and money and stand in the way of meritorious measures. It will be long before there is any reform in this regard. The human nature of Congressmen will have to change first.

THE people of Atlanta are very credulous if they believe the story that the late Rev. J. G. Armstrong was in fact Wilkes Booth, assassin of President Lincoln. Mr. Armstrong resembled Booth, but he wasn't Booth. Before and after his residence in Wheeling he was seen by men who had known Booth and could not have been deceived. Dr. Thayer, of Gratton, who assisted in the Booth autopsy, had seen the actor and recognized him in the dead man. The world has the correct story of the assassin's fate.

THE Catholic Church and Mr. Parnell. It is easy to believe that the action of Bishop Reeves threatening with excommunication those of his flock who support Parnell has caused excitement. Excommunication is the severest penalty the Roman Catholic church imposes. It is reserved for offenses of the gravest character.

Mr. Parnell has lost all right to leadership of the cause he has imperiled by his conduct. The Catholic church, which has given the Irish cause the great benefit of its support, may well advise its members that Mr. Parnell is no longer worthy to be followed. To punish with excommunication those who do not heed this good advice is to go too far. All the same it will come under Mr. Parnell some of the ground he is standing on.

What the House Did.

The Republican House of Representatives which has just passed into history decided seventeen contested election cases. Eleven of these cases were decided in favor of Republicans; six in favor of Democrats. It is to be supposed that the six Democrats were entitled to their seats or they would not have been seated, or rather kept in their seats, for the contestants were Republicans.

Every case was tried on its merits by the Elections Committee and a report in accordance with the evidence made to the House. Naturally Republicans preferred their own, but this preference in no case stood in the way of justice so far as the proof showed on which side the right lay.

The late House of Representatives will be judged by this creditable record of non-partisan adjudication of election cases. It shows anything but a rampant partisan spirit.

Magnificent Undertaking.

About a year ago the INTELLIGENCER published exclusively one morning the full details of the gigantic plan to build an Inter-Continental railway, connecting this country and the Republics of South America. This paper had privately obtained the information from the promoters of the scheme at Washington, and it was telegraphed in full from this city to the press of the country. Our purpose in recalling this bit of enterprise, for which most of our city contemporaries gave us due credit, is to remind readers that at that time many newspapers regarded the scheme as impracticable, and some able editors, in exhaustive comments, labored to prove, and probably succeeded to their own satisfaction, that the construction of such a road was a physical impossibility; that it would prove an engineering feat which human genius could not perform. When we consider that similar comments were made when it was first proposed to connect the Atlantic and Pacific oceans by building a road across the continent, through the Rocky mountains, these newspaper articles were more amusing than discouraging. But the INTELLIGENCER had received its information from men who had devoted years of study to the project, and who had carefully examined every obstacle, and knew that, in addition, it had received the sanction of the administration and of Mr. Blaine and the Pan-American Congress. The INTELLIGENCER was, therefore, content to wait developments, when the wiseness of the press would find that the plan was not only feasible, but was actually to be carried out.

Subsequent events have confirmed our belief, for, shortly after, the matter was brought to the attention of Congress, and the Inter-Continental Railway Commission was appointed with instructions to survey a route, and the South American countries took similar action. In addition, a military surveying party was assigned to assist in the work. During the year, the project has taken practical shape and now the Commission is ready to proceed with the work.

On Wednesday the preliminaries for making the survey were arranged and Mr. William F. Rhank, of Pittsburgh, was selected as Organizing Engineer. The work will be divided among three surveying parties, including the military party, which has been assigned to the Central American States. The other two parties are to work north and south from a central point in Colombia. The main obstacle in the way of success will be in crossing the Andes, but eminent engineers have given their opinion that the difficulty will be overcome.

No more important enterprise was ever undertaken, and none could be conceived which could be of greater commercial benefit to the country. With railroad communication from this country through the countries of South America to Buenos Ayres, Argentina, reciprocity of trade between this Government and the republics through which the road passes, and the revival of our merchant marine service for trading between the ports of South and North America, will come an era of prosperity such as no other country has ever experienced, and to the people of two continents and a monument to the wisdom of the greatest statesman of his day, Hon. James G. Blaine, and to the Republican party.

The State Development Intelligencer.

Three years ago, in the interest of the development of West Virginia, the INTELLIGENCER published the most complete newspaper ever issued in the interest of any State. It was the largest edition of a newspaper ever published in West Virginia. It accomplished some highly desirable ends, any one of which would have been worth all the effort.

It woke up the people of West Virginia. It went over the mountains and through the valleys preaching a new evangel. It told the men of West Virginia what they did not know about their own possessions. It reminded them that there was a work to be done for market value to that which is rich in intrinsic worth. It did more than anything ever had done to inspire West Virginians with a belief in West Virginia.

Since the appearance of the Special State Development Edition of the INTELLIGENCER in 1888 more West Virginia capital has been put in West Virginia land and West Virginia enterprises in general than in the whole previous history of the State. It pointed out to the young men of West Virginia inviting careers in their own State and practically stopped the exodus of the young and enterprising. It called to those who had gone out and bade them return to the finest undeveloped field the country has to offer to brains and industry. There is not a county in the State that cannot tell of the response to this invitation. The wanderers are returning and taking hold with energy.

It woke up the world. People who knew of West Virginia only as a spot on the map of the United States learned of the vast timber and mineral wealth which that spot represents. It told of that wealth in detail, what it is, where it is, where it is to find its markets and how it is to get to them. It told what is to be found within the limits of each county and what had been done up to that time to develop each county. It told of the schools and the churches as indicating the progress in civilization.

It told the story in six languages and set the world to thinking. Since then inquiries have come from every one of those languages. From that day to this more outside capital has come into West Virginia than in all the years before since she has been a State.

If the State had given $100,000 for that one edition of one newspaper the State could now count up a percentage of profit that would look like a fairy story in figures, and then the ball would not be told. When the INTELLIGENCER determined to give the ball another ringing a cordial response was expected. Expectation has been outstripped.

Orders for the paper are far in excess of anything that was looked for up to this time, for circumstances have made it impossible to announce the date of publication. Advertising space has been sought eagerly by men who plant their money where they expect good returns. At the present rate the advertising books for this Development Edition will soon close, for no more advertisements will be accepted than can be conveniently accommodated. Reading matter descriptive of the wealth and development of West Virginia will have the right of way.

The INTELLIGENCER desires to thank its friends for this new evidence of their confidence in its practical enterprise and ability to promote the welfare of West Virginia. It is timely also to thank those who have prepared or are preparing articles on special subjects for the forthcoming Development Edition. When it comes it will be worthy of the great subject with which it will deal. This much the INTELLIGENCER can safely promise.
